The current number of councillors must be maintained as a minimum. Even if there needs to be a slight change to the boundaries for Red Gum Ward.

Single ward councillors MUST not be contemplated, this would be a backward step. It is essential the there is a diversity of representation for each ward in the municipality.

The current model has proved very effective and gives residents a choice within the wards when seeking out individual councillor's points of view.

Maintaining the current number of councillors is essential for the local governing of the most multicultural municipality in Australia, high unemployment and a diverse range of needs and services are best addressed by a diverse community representation.

Best Regards,
Richard Kenny
